

DANYELLE FREEMAN

COOKING UP THE DISH ON THE LATEST EATS.

As the first food blogger to become the restaurant critic for the New York Daily News, founder of restaurantgirl.com Danyelle Freeman has her finger on the pulse of fine food in the city. "You can eat anywhere in the world right here in America," she boasts. "The energy, the people, the culture, and of course, the food. [New York is] the most exciting place to eat and live in the world."

Freeman likes to mix a Stoli martini straight up with olives with her favorite dishes, among them The Little Owl's gravy sliders and their pork chops. But her writing isn't necessarily what she'd want as her lasting legacy. "I'd like to be remembered for making all of the world's foods more accessible and less intimidating, everything from Shanghai soup dumpling to Turkish BBQ and Vietnamese noodles."
